ASSIGNMENT 2:

JUNAGADH TOURISM

Junagadh is an historic city in Saurashtra, nestling in the foothills of Girnar, about 350 km from Ahmedabad. The city dates back to 319 BC. The Uparkot Fort stands testimony to the presence of the Mauryan dynasty and it was said to have been built by Chandragupta. Graharipu, a Chudasama king came across the fort sometime around 976 AD and since then the fort came under various dynasties. The Fort is not the only place to visit in Junagadh. There are plenty of attractions in Junagadh that will keep you busy occupied for days.

1. The Mohabat Maqbara:

The Mohabat Maqbara is also known as the tomb of Bahaduddinbai Hasainibhai. What makes it so different from other mausoleums is its unique architecture that incorporates elements of Indo-Islamic and Gothic styles with quite elaborate stone carvings and the circular winding staircases on all four minarets. It is beautiful and poetic in concept and execution.

2. Uparkot Fort:

The Uparkot Fort dates back to the time of the Mauryan Empire and thereafter it was occupied by the Chudasama dynasty. It settles in the foothills of the Girnar hills and it has three gateways enclosed one within the other. The walls are about 70 feet high with the inner gateway resplendently carved in stone. A huge cannon graces the courtyard and another one is in the southern part of the fort. Within the precinct one can find the Jama Masjid said to have been built by Mahmud Begda. This was supposedly the palace of Ranakadevi before Mahmud Begda conquered the fort. The tomb of Nuri Shah sits close to the mosque and has some beautiful carvings. The fort also houses two steepwells, the Adi Chadi dating back to the Chudasama dynasty and the Navghan Kuvo. One can also find Buddhist caves in the vicinity as well as the Baba Pyara caves that back to the 2nd century. However, it is the Buddhist caves that impress with their rock cut architecture and chattri halls. It is believed the Buddhist monks lived here before going on to Ellora and Ajanta. There is a manmade lake, the Narvali lake right inside the fort. The fort is large and it takes about 2 to 3 hours to explore it in its entirety.

3. Girnar Jain Temple:

Like the Dattatreya temple, the Girnar Jain temple is located in the Girnar Hills and it has a collection of beautiful temples dedicated to various tirthankaras who chose to meditate in the solitude of the hills. There are temples of the Digambara and Shwetambar sect. It is said that Neminath, the 22nd Tirthankara renounced his royal life and became a Jain monk here. His wife, Rajal, also joined him to lead life as an ascetic. Some believe that the Jains here predate Asoka. The Jain temple here rivals the Dilwara temples in the beauty of carvings. Walking through the complex takes you to the old granite temple built by Bhoja Raja of Kutch and a large temple created by Vastupal. There are 16 temples here with the largest one dedicated to Neminath. A short walk brings you to the huge statue of Rishabh dev, the first Tirthankar, modeled along the lines of the statue at Palana. Then there is a temple dedicated to Lord Parshwanath that one must visit. Lord Parshwanath is shown as being shaded by a cobra. Kumarpal Temple is also worth a visit. The temple complex also has a large water tank known as Bhim Kund. If one climbs higher up one can visit the Digambar Jain temples and the Rajalmati Cave. The temple has the idol of Bahubali and the idol of Lord Neminath and Parshwanath. Ashok Shilalekh of Ashoka Edicts: That Emperor Asoka had a presence here is testified by the stone edicts left behind by him in 261 BC. The inscription in stone preach the 16 principles and the story of Ashoka. For those who love history, this is a must visit place in Junagadh.
